

Questions to ask your Dentist

It can be difficult to know what questions to ask and what qualities to look for in a prospective new dentist, so we've put together a few general questions to get you started.

What types of dentistry do you specialize in?

Dentistry is a broad and complicated field, and not every dentist can specialize in every type of dentistry. That's why it is important to establish what your specific needs are and find a dentist whose specialties align closely with your needs.

We specialize in family and cosmetic dentistry. This includes oral health maintenance, treatments for dental problems such as cavities, gum disease, and tooth loss; as well as cosmetic procedures designed to brighten and rejuvenate the appearance of your smile.

Can I see some examples of your work?

Most dentists, especially those who specialize in cosmetic work, can provide you with examples of previous work they've done. Take the time to review these examples, and find cases that are similar to yours. This should give you a good general idea of the doctor's experience and skill with the procedure you are having done.

What options are available for my problems?

This is an important question to ask your dentist, to determine whether he or she provides a wide enough range of procedures to allow you to choose the options that are right for you.

In many cases, a single problem may have several potential treatment options available. It's important that the dentist you choose provides you with a variety of treatment options.
